Moran was born in Bolton, England, but he immigrated to the United States with his family in 1844. He studied art in Philadelphia and New York, and he first traveled to the American West in 1871. He was immediately captivated by the region's stunning scenery, and he spent the rest of his life painting its mountains, rivers, lakes, and forests.

Moran's paintings are known for their vibrant colors, dramatic lighting, and meticulous detail. He often used exaggerated perspectives and exaggerated forms to convey the grandeur of the American West. His paintings were hugely popular, and they helped to promote tourism and conservation in the region.

In addition to his paintings, Moran was also a gifted writer and photographer. He published several books about his travels, and his photographs were widely reproduced in magazines and newspapers. He was also a strong advocate for the preservation of the American West, and he played a key role in the establishment of Yellowstone National Park.
